Mountain gorillas

This huge creature is a mountain gorilla. Mountain gorillas live in the Virunga range of mountains, at the borders of three African countries - Rwanda, Uganda and the Democratic Republic of Congo. On my trip to the Virunga range I discovered that the forests where the mountain gorillas live are often cloudy, misty and cold.

This gorilla is the largest of the great apes and looks like humans (but more hair!). Gorillas can be identified by their unique nose prints, and like human fingerprints, no two gorilla noses have the same print.

A gorilla's diet is mainly vegetarian and a full-grown mountain gorilla can eat up to 27 kg of vegetation a day – that's the equivalent of 65 tins of baked beans! An adult male gorilla can weigh about the same as a motorcycle and is characterised by the streak of silver fur on its back, so it is known with the term "silverback".

Like humans, gorillas are pregnant for about nine months – the time between these births is usually about four years. Unfortunately, about 40 per cent of young gorillas die before they reach adulthood, because of illness or injury. During their lifetime, females usually raise three young.

Sadly, the mountain gorilla is the most endangered of the four different gorilla species. People occasionally kill gorillas for food and baby gorillas are also sometimes captured and sold as pets. Plus the gorilla's forest home is smaller and smaller as people cut down to supply wood for the illegal wood trade or to make way for new houses.

D) WRITING (2nd option model)

Read this letter of a friend to another about a visit to a zoo.

Dear Carol,

Yesterday I visited the zoo in Cabárceno (Cantabria) with my parents and brother. We went in my father's car and we arrived at half past ten in the morning. My father bought a family ticket for all and went into the zoo. We were very excited. The place is quite beautiful. It has a lot of exotic animals. It is very large and looks like the nature itself.

We walked around the park and could see giraffes, zebras, elephants, rhinos and funny monkeys. There were also all types of snakes of different colours.

We had lunch there, in a restaurant in the park (I ordered pizza) and continued our visit in the afternoon at around 4 pm. We saw parrots, gorillas and buffalos. My brother took a lot of pictures of the animals, of the place and us to have a souvenir of the day.

It was a very exciting and interesting place and I recommend you this park when you come over to Spain.

Kisses,

Laura
